2. NEW ACADEMIC PROGRAMMES INITIATED (UG AND PG)

BBM(IB) (Bachelor of Business Management in International Business), a degree course affiliated to the University of Pune was launched by the college.

The two autonomous experimental courses launched by the college this year were:

1. English language Orientation Course for Wadia Campus faculty and
2. Certificate Course in Yoga conducted

3. INNOVATIONS IN CURRICULAR DESIGN AND TRANSACTION

1. Visits to industrial units and professional firms, and interacting with the people in the field: A visit to an industrial unit or a professional firm goes a long way to impart practical knowledge of the subject to the students. This is particularly true of such subjects as business environment, marketing and banking. Such visits facilitate students' interaction with the people who are actually involved in dealing with the problems in a business or a professional world.

This year the students of auditing and taxation visited the Income Tax Department several times to discuss the latest amendments to the Income Tax Act directly with the government staff. Similarly the students of marketing management were asked to visit Fab India and make a report of the marketing mix strategy. The business communication students visited the Tata Central Archives, Pune, and wrote a report on the archives after the visit and after accessing the archives website. The business administration students visited branch office of a bank to collect information on the D-Mat account. The business organisation students visited a few stationery shops to study the utility of various office files. Marketing students visited cooperative organizations to study their marketing strategies and consumer court to know what kind of complaints were handled by the court.(Deobagkar, V Joshi, Vhankate, A Jadhav)

2. Business games, contests and quiz competitions: These methods result in a healthy and competitive spirit among the students besides making the whole exercise enjoyable. It is a very effective way of creating or enhancing students' interest in a subject. Teachers have organised quiz and other competitions including business games in such subjects as company law, business communication, secretarial practice, amalgamation, accountancy, liquidation and auditing. Contests have been held for topics like budgetary control, and collection, analysis and presentation of data.

This year there were monthly class tests and public speaking competitions for the business communication and marketing class. The English class prepared an objective quiz written on lessons taught and based on the information in the text. (V Joshi, Kurien)

3. Group discussions: Perhaps the best way to relieve the tedium of a lecture is to engage in a dialogue, discussion or a question-answer session with the students. While the Indian educational system is still to fully gear itself up to this very effective way of creating interest in the mind of a student in his subject, a few teachers at Ness Wadia have been very regularly practising it. 'Group discussions' has been a very common method adopted by the business practices as well as auditing class. (Sonawane, Deobagkar)

4. Role play and simulations: In role play the student himself experiences the situation. Being a part of the situation helps his understanding of his subject much better than being an outsider. This method has been applied in simulating such situations as the Annual General Body meeting of a company or a manager appreciating or warning a junior employee. The method not only helps understanding of a subject, it also enhances student's confidence. This year the method was employed in the auditing and taxation class. (Deobagkar)

5. Presentations/seminars: A good many teachers at Ness Wadia require their students to prepare on a topic and present it before other students. This method expects students to put in serious efforts in presentation. Such seminars are conducted for entrepreneurship, business environment, marketing, business administration, income tax and auditing.

This year students of banking (banking practices and law), marketing (creative and innovative advertisements, role of animation in advertisements), English (time management, World War II, Venice), business practices (science and technology), made presentations on various subjects, . (Girija, Vhankate, Kurien, Sonawane)

6. Home assignments: Home assignments are normally related to the subject and offer the students an opportunity to write at length on a topic. The method also enhances their writing skills. It is common to give home assignments to students who didn't do well in their last examinations.

This year the economics teachers asked their students to read articles in financial papers and collect them subject wise. They were asked to pick up a common theme from these articles and present them before the students. This greatly helped their understanding of economic policy and factors behind such a policy. The English class was also given home assignments on the basis of their syllabus.

7. Surveys and interviews: Surveys acquaint the students directly with the real world as it affects a large many people. These also introduce them to various statistical methods used to arrive at generalisation about a group of people. A survey simultaneously brings them home the limitations of a generalisation and conclusion from a case study. This year too the marketing students conducted a survey on buyer's behavior.

The economics students identified a few consumer durables and then interviewed the retailers to know the pattern of demand. This way they were able to identify factors influencing the demand. This exercise was done to understand the Keynesian theory of consumption which is an important part of macroeconomics. (Dias, Asha Jadhav)

8. Business Plan presentations: This has been a very innovative method of acquainting the students with the difficulties and the exciting experiences that an amateur entrepreneur goes through when he prepares his first ever business plan for loan to be submitted to the financial institution. Students here imagine themselves to be entrepreneurs and prepare their own business plan.

The Third Year business entrepreneurship students participated in a business plan presentation contest this year. (Naronha)

9. Newspaper in education: The role of newspapers and other journals in education is far more important than is realised. A few teachers at the Ness Wadia have been employing newspapers regularly for this purpose. They select articles, including editorials, in newspapers and journals relevant to their subject and make its reading into a compulsory assignment or presentation. Sometimes they set questions on the article and ask students to write answers.

This year economics students were asked to identify current news and editorials relevant to their syllabus topics and read them aloud to fellow classmates and then identify important points in the news matter. (Dias)

10. Adjunct faculty and guest lectures: We feel the idea of adjunct faculty at undergraduate level is a totally novel idea adopted by the college. Under this scheme, people of eminence in various fields are invited to teach a syllabus-related topic to students 3 to 4 times a year. This is different from guest lectures where the speaker may not be invited regularly over a period.

This year following people of eminence spoke to students as either the member of the adjunct faculty or guest speakers:

1. Vivek Sadhale, Company Secretary and Head (Legal), Persistent Systems, Pune, on 'Mergers and Acquisitions'.
 2. Mohan Madgulkar, HR expert, on 'Human Resource Management during Economic Downturn'.
 3. Ravindra Limaye, VP, Shriram Transport and finance, Pune, on 'Non-banking Finance Companies and Financial Services'
 4. 'Legal Environment and Business'
- (Vhankate, V Joshi, Sonawane, Chaudhari)

11. Observation and Experiment: Experiments have been conducted in teaching such topics in statistics as binomial distribution and theory of queues.

This method was used this year in the economics class to facilitate the understanding of the Purchasing Power Parity theory. The students were asked to buy certain quantity of commodities whose price they are instructed to watch over a period of time. This helped them understand the relationship between price level and the value of money. (Dias)

12. Display charts and audio-visual techniques: Students have often prepared display charts on a subject and held exhibition to present the matter in a concise and attractive way. Such subjects as marketing, business entrepreneurship, banking have extensively used this method. Preparation of transparencies for overhead projection, power point presentation and even a short film by students have been in practice for these subjects.

The students of the English class this year collected information on English authors and their works and prepared charts on the information collected.

19. Achievement motivation training:

13. Peer assessment: Assessment of one's performance by one's own peers provides incentive for better performance since one always likes to be in good books with one's peers. At the same time peers know the difficulties that block better performance of their fellow classmates. This year this method was employed by the English class. (Mhasade)

14. Learning from mistakes: Learning from mistakes of one's own or others is a very effective method of learning. The business communication class this year too made a write-up on mistakes committed by students in their terminal examination. They were asked to solve their question paper again and make efforts to realize the reason they committed the mistakes. (Vhankate)

15. Website analysis: In modern times, Website has become an instant and extremely easy source of information on institutions and organizations. Before visiting an organization, a visit to its website always equips students with the basic information on the organization and saves their time during the actual visit. This also helps them to grasp better the dynamics of the organization they are visiting.

This year business communications students conducted a visit to the adjacent Tata Archives but had accessed its website before the visit. This helped them to grasp the historical details at archives much better. (V Joshi)

16. Maps as means of communication: Use of maps as a prominent means of non-verbal communication is not sufficiently emphasized in India. This is especially realized when people often reach their destination after several queries on way.

To realize this fact, the business communication students this year were asked to prepare a map of college campus and the map of the distance they traversed each day from home to college. This was a very innovative way of teaching them the use of maps. (V Joshi)

17. Feedback from students: A feedback on one's teaching and subsequently modifying one's method of teaching, if necessary, in the light of the feedback is very helpful to the teacher. That was what the business communication teacher did this year to examine her way of teaching for which she prepared a full-fledged questionnaire for her student-respondents. (V Joshi)

18. Technical glossary: Defining technical terms in precise words requires great conceptual understanding of the subject which needs considerable reading about the subject. This kind of assignment enhances not only a student's understanding of the subject but also his compiling, writing and logical skills. The business communication teacher gave this assignment to her students this year by providing them a list 60 technical terms used in information and telecommunication technology. (V Joshi)

18. An interview with an expert or person in the field: An interview with an expert in the field provides not only a real world viewpoint but also an insight into the subject. The interview can also provide one with a list of essential reading list.

It was from this point of view that the students of business administration interviewed the human resource manager for training. They also interviewed women entrepreneurs to get their first hand experiences as entrepreneurs.

19. Document analysis and interpretation: Focusing on a single document and analyzing it often helps a better understanding of the subject. The document can be read through carefully and interpreted by different students in their own way. This reveals different angles of the issue. This was done by the business administration class in case of such documents as balance sheet and annual report. (Vhankate),

20. Supplementary reading material: In order to encourage students to broaden their reading base beyond the textbook, the teachers sometimes recommend supplementary reading to the students. This may not be directly related to the subject but helps students for a better understanding of their subject. This year this was done by the business administration students. (Vhankate)

21. Exam rehearsal: A time-tested way to better preparation for the finals is to rehearse it. The English class this year took rehearsal of the final examination which they found very useful. (Kurien)

4. INTER-DISCIPLINARY PROGRAMMES STARTED

To facilitate easy viewing of the marks for students, the college decided to upload the internal marks on the college website.

The students were supposed to browse the website and asked to contact the college office in case of any query. The cell number of the chairperson of the Exam Committee was also given to them.

The students did avail of the facility to a great extent. At the same time the committee decided to have some facility regarding getting the question paper ready for the term-end examinations and decided to use the e-media from next year.

7. INITIATIVE TOWARDS FACULTY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

The college has always been taking initiative and making efforts for the academic growth of its teachers. These efforts include deputation of teachers to various academic events, organisation of symposia seminars and guest lectures, allowing teachers to work as guest faculty and encouraging them to be on various academic committees. For this often it makes special arrangements as granting special leave, providing finance, making special recommendations and lecturing adjustments without in any way adversely affecting students' interests.

21. IMPROVEMENTS IN THE LIBRARY SERVICES

1. Computer aided Stock Taking

Stock taking of the reading material in the library is a very common practice in quality management to ensure proper functioning of the library. The college library has a collection more than 50000 volumes and each year less than 10000 volumes are checked for the purpose. The library closes during stock taking. The manual method of stock taking is very time consuming and causes much inconvenience to the readers. Generally the stock taking is undertaken during the vacation to avoid this inconvenience. In these circumstances, computer aided stock taking is really a boon.

A Data Collection Unit (DCU) has been purchased for library. The DCU has the facility to scan the barcode and store it. Since all the collection in the library has a barcode, as the stock taking process is started, we just have to scan a considerable accession. The DCU is attached to the computer. The scan data of accession number is loaded in excel .Excel has the facility to reproduce the data in ascending order. The DCU can be charged like a mobile. It has also facility to fill the data manually. Accordingly we can scan the data of an issued book, available book and complete the stock taking work in record time very accurately.
